

FIE SOCIAL HAS DISASTROUS END

40 Persons Narrowly Escape Death When Flames Destroy School.

About forty persons attending a play at the Golden Rule schoolhouse, six miles south of Tulsa, had narrow escape from death Tuesday night when the building was destroyed by fire. The conflagration was caused by the explosion of a gasoline lamp.

The blaze spread rapidly and a few minutes after the explosion the schoolhouse was a mass of flames. Two persons were badly burned in getting out of the building.

No attempt was made to save the furniture or books. The flaming lot and was scattered to all parts of the room and destroyed everything in its path. Yesterday there was only a mass of embers and ashes where the school building had stood.

The building was a one-room structure. It was practically new, having been built only three years ago by the residents of that district at a cost of $1,000. The desks, books and other equipment had brought the total damage to approximately $4,000. The building was insured.

No arrangements were made yesterday to take the place of the one destroyed. A temporary structure probably will be used for a permanent building.

CLAIMS TREES WERE LIFELESS

This Plea By L. M. Acres Wins Case Against Nursery Company.

The suit of the Mount Hope Nursery company against L. M. Acres resulted in a verdict for the defendant in Judge Clay's division of the district court yesterday. Acres was sued by the nursery company for $75 which they claimed was due for fruit trees delivered to him. The defendant declared the trees were lifeless when he received them.

Judge Clay yesterday began the trial of Ira D. Fincher against Laura E. Loyd. The plaintiff is suing for $500 which he claims is due on notes given him by the defendant.

JAPANESE POLITICS CAUSE OF TROUBLE

New Prime Minister Is Looked Upon as Man to Deliver Country.

ECHOES

THERE was no CLEAR water IN the mains AT a fire IN Tulsa THE other DAY and the FIREMEN had to USE the muddy IN process. Blame!

(Correspondence of The Associated Press) TOKYO, Oct. 11.—The appointment of Count Seiki Terauchi as prime minister has caused an increase in the anti-Japan sentiment expressed by an political event in recent years and the dramatic circumstances attending Terauchi's entry into power served to heighten its importance and significance.

There are two chief explanations offered as clarifying the action of the throne and the powers behind the scenes in placing in office a conservative nonparty and military ministry in a manner which could intense opposition of the political parties.

The trend in the European war reaching a crisis, Japan's desire for the wisdom of placing herself in a position to protect her interests in the far east and to that end has called to leadership the one man who possesses the greatest influence and authority over the military forces of the empire.

Some Criticism.

The second suggestion is that the statesmen who control the present destinies of the nation are greatly disturbed at the rapid growth of the movement of democracy which recently culminated in the arrangement of two parties and that they wish to check a constitutional progress for which they believe the nation is not yet prepared.

The latter explanation is the one that seems to appeal to the masses of the Japanese people, who as their voice is reflected in the press, condemn the circumstances of government as a defiance of the rights of the people and reactionary violation of the spirit and underlying principle of the constitution which were granted by Emperor Meiji.

In his interview with the Associated Press cabled to the United States on October 10 Premier Terauchi vigorously rejected any implication that his ministry would be militarist. He laid stress on the urgent necessity of reforms at home and the imperative need of Japan's maintaining itself with foreign powers and of being strictly fair and upright in all her dealings with them. He emphasized a special desire to promote the friendly relations with the United States.

In this connection it is germane to note that Ki Inukai, the leader of the Kokumin-to, or independent national group in the house in a statement today says he sees no justification for the fear voiced abroad that the new cabinet "may prove an exponent of ultra politics." He adds:

"Count Terauchi is a man well versed in administrative affairs, he is extremely cautious in all he does. But—a soldier in origin he may be expected to follow the military fashion of ordering things in domestic politics. Nevertheless, that will fit in with the situation."

Viscount Takuma Kata, ex-minister for foreign affairs, who was recommended for the premiership by Marquis Okuma, the outgoing premier, but whose name was beaten by the elder Terauchi, was yesterday elected president of the new political party formed from the three groups which have made up the governmental majority in the house.

Strengthening of the national defense is one of the planks in the platform of the new party and particular stress is laid on the necessity of developing the principle of constitutional government. Viscount Kata urged his followers to devote their efforts for realization of the perfect attainment of the true aim of the constitutional government.

"We do not hold that the prime minister of the country must be the president of a political party," he said, "that we see no reason in the theory that one can not become prime minister because one is president of a political party."

The long smoldering contest between the forces of the bureaucratic party and the civil government on one hand and on the other the participants of the movement which has for its goal the extension of constitutionalism was brought to a head by the Resurrect Old Charge Against Fiery Orator and Send Him Back to Kentucky.

The work of William Madison Hicks, Socialist speaker, finally got so hot that the Democrats could not stand it any longer, so they have framed up an old charge on him, had him arrested and taken back to Kentucky.

It has long been known that Hicks' speeches showing up the Democrat machine has been a thorn in the side of the "gang," and for a long time they have been trying to frame up something that would get him out of the state and at last they have accomplished it.

The speeches of Hicks on the fair election law were making such strides among the Democrats that word went down to Democratic headquarters at Oklahoma City to get rid of him in any manner possible—kill him if necessary.

This only goes to show that the machine recognizes its days of stealing elections is over and that it must stop the avalanche of votes which will be cast for the fair election law.

CORN ROLLING IN.

KILDARE, Okla., Nov. 1.—During the past few days many farmers of this community and from the Osage east of here have brought in wagon loads of corn for market at the local elevators. It was not considered that this year's corn crop would amount to a great deal because of the continued dry weather just when the corn was needing the moisture, but the quality of the corn that is being brought in at the present time is up to the regular standard and many farmers report that their crops are almost as good as usual. This is especially true of the men from the east side of the county and the Osage.

Kay county is one of the leading counties of Oklahoma in the production of all grains, especially corn, and many of the towns in this section owe their existence to the incomes derived from the marketing of corn, wheat and other crops.
